J. B. Green Farm
Hudson's Corner vicinity private

c. 1780-1800

The Green farmhouse is a rare survivor of the small 20' by 16' frame houses common to the fourth quarter of the eighteenth century. Despite extensive remodeling, the one-room plan dwelling has an early shed-roofed kitchen addition and an extremely rare clapboard roof. The old clapboard roof is exposed under the kitchen roof and consists of two layers of riven oak clapboards. The first layer has feathered edges and is laid horizontally ~~1/4~~ to the roof peak. The second layer, on the other hand, is laid on a perpendicular axis to the roof ridge and survives with an outer layer of red paint. Exposed in the principal first floor room are beaded floor joists, while the beaded floor joists in the kitchen have been covered over.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Green Farm is located on the south side of MD 667 between Hudsons's Corner and Marion, Somerset County, Maryland. Liberia Church Road intersects the farm entrance approximately .25 of a mile south of MD 667. The single-story frame house is accompanied by a relocated store building and several early 20th - century farm buildings. Facing east, the primary gable of house follows a north/south axis.

The single-story one-room plan frame house with shed kitchen rests on a brick pier foundation and is uniformly sheathed with aluminum siding. The steeply pitched asphalt shingle roof has slightly extended eaves. A bedroom addition was attached to the south gable end of the house in 1948.

The east three-bay elevation is fully covered by a shed roof enclosed porch. A centered entrance is flanked by 6/6 sash windows. The door is a replacement, but some early cyma curve window trim has been left exposed.

The north gable end has a single 6/6 sash window in both the first floor and attic. Six over six sash windows also light the shed addition.

The west side of the main house is fully covered by the shed kitchen addition.

The south gable end of the main block is largely covered by the 1940 bedroom and bathroom additon. A narrow brick chimney rises from the south gable end of the main house. Two small 2/2 sash windows flank the stack and light the upper floor.

The first floor room has been generally remodeled as has the rest of the house. Beaded floor joists remain exposed in addition to some cyma curve door moldings. The mantel has been removed, but the stair still rises in the southeast corner. A board and patten door encloses the stair. The adjacent stair post is beaded.

The eight foot shed kitchen was original to the house, but its historic fabric has been covered with modern materials. According to the owner, extremely wide boards were covered over on the west wall. An investigation in the loft space revealed the now covered floor joists are beaded.

The second floor of the main house is divided into two rooms separated by a stud partition with a two-panel Greek Revival period door. A small axis door in the rear knee wall allows access into the space above the kitchen. Visible in this space are two layers of riven clapboard roofs fastened with wrought-nails. The underneath layer of clapboards measures four feet long and six inches wide with a three inch to four inch exposure. The second layer, which was laid perpendicular to the first, measures three feet long by six inches wide with eighteen-inch exposure. The second layer retains a coat of red paint. The back wall of the house is exposed and reveals pit-sawn lumber and a common rafter roof.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The Green farmhouse is a rare survivor of the small c. 1780–1800 20' by 16' frame houses common to the 18th century. Despite extensive remodeling, the one-room plan structure has an extremely rare clapboard roof consisting of two layers of riven oak clapboards. The second layer retains a coat of red paint. Exposed in the principal room are beaded floor joists. The nine foot rear shed was an integral part of the initial house. Structural evidence and now covered beaded joists indicate the shed kitchen was built at the same time as the main house.

The store building has been extensively reworked as migrant labor housing. Its most distinctive feature is the round-topped false front with multi-pane windows to each side of the center door. A shed addition for tractor storage extends northward. A layer of corrugated tin covers the plain weatherboarding. A rebuilt brick chimney pierces the west gable end.

The other buildings are ordinary early 20th - century structures.
